Location Worldbuilding

World archetype - Changing world

Welcome to Glemme, once a prosperous and welcoming city to all. Now drowning in fear and shadow. Isolated from the outside world. Mysterious creatures have appeared around the city. Stalking, hiding but always watching. It is unclear what they want or what threat they pose but the city was immediately placed into quarantine as the creatures were localised to this area, and no one knows why.

Normal life in the city has broken down. Most people hide in their homes for fear of the creatures, others try and fail to combat them. For others, the work continues, those providing aid, maintaining the city infrastructure, quelling unrest and violence. In the gloom, researchers and scientists are working within a building known as the Sweiss to uncover the truth of these creatures. But their seclusion, secrecy and hostility to other civilians within the quarantine raises many speculations.

1- Home - Where Naz lives with her roommate, safe zone for players.
2- Silo Distribution (work) - The aid distribution hub where Naz and Jacob work.
3- Club Sur Ton (jazz bar) - A residential building that contains a jazz bar where Naz and the player will learn about the people and their thoughts about the city.
4- Researchers home - Quest specific location
5- The Sweiss - Large, highly guarded building of much suspicion to the other residents of the quarantine.

Player char design

Naz Khorshidi, a 37 year old woman currently living with the Glemme quarantine. Standing at 176 cm tall with warm, olive tone skin. She has thick, straight black hair but keeps it covered under a hijab during the day. Dark eyes that naturally fall into an intimidating gaze, framed by her long nose and full eyebrows.Her strong features, her expression tired but looks like she knows something vital that you do not. Her dark clothes are made of thick fabric, but worn effortlessly. All reinforce all emphasize the powerful and controlled impression she leaves on people.

She is generally introverted, preferring to do her work alone with as few complications as possible. However she is compassionate to those she cares about and always ready to go out of her way to assist those who need help. Generally describable as inquisitive and intelligent, traveling about the city under such strange circumstances has taught her to be quick on her feet and come up with plans quickly to address whatever situation she finds herself in.

However, she is very impatient. Since her independence and intelligence allow her to be very independent. So when dealing with other people and all their complicated behavior she can become frustrated and would rather just go off on her own. This causes conflict within her as she does care for others and is aware of how her behavior impacts them but she still occasionally loses composure.

Like many citizens of Glemme she wishes to be free of the quarantine and has fears that due to the lack of information about what's going on, that they would spend the rest of their lives within it. This is part of the reason why she took up the job as a courier within the quarantine. By traveling the city she will be able to get a good understanding of how things work and also learn more about the creatures that haunt them.

Non Player Character Design

Jacob Andrews, Manager at the Silo District aid distribution center. 32 years old and 165 cm tall with brown eyes with short brown hair. He often wears sunglasses, bright graphic printed tshirts, jean pants and a high visibility jacket that announces him as an important government employee. A charismatic, outgoing personality with great people and organization skills make him perfect for managing the distribution center. He is always ready to lend a hand, never far from a laugh. However due to the nature of his work, he can be very stubborn and ready to put his foot down when confronted. His trusted position also allows him to keep tabs on the movements of the city. His desire for freedom and bright, resolute personality with access to intimate access to information about the city makes him the perfect foil to Naz as their goals for freedom align.

Linear Narrative/Path For Mission

The game's linear narrative (Heussner et al. 2015. 107-108) continues with this quest, starting a new day at the player's home. The quests and narrative up to this point would have the player learn about other people's attempts to escape the city and gain their trust.After a reflective dialogue with their roommate, the player is contacted by their boss, Jacob, who summons them to the distribution center for a special job.
At work, Jacob privately explains they have information to enter the Sweiss building. The player first goes to a cover location, then to the jazz bar Sur Ton to deliver aid. The bartender and a waiter provide exposition about the city and its creatures. The bartender gives the player a mystery package to deliver.

The next location is a civilian home. A dismissive man ushers the player inside, inspects the package, and deems the player trustworthy. He provides a Sweiss-branded jacket, and they depart for the Sweiss building.
Inside, the player must silently follow the man. They reach an office, place the package, and the man works on a computer. Hearing people outside, they flee in the opposite direction, initiating a stealth mission to avoid guards. Cornered, the man triggers an alarm signaling a shadow creature's presence to create a diversion for escape.
The plan fails, and the player ends up in an observation area, seeing a creature called the Angel. After the confusion, they escape the building, ending the quest.

Ambient Dialog

Generic Ambients

- When Naz is traveling around the city: “I hope those fuckers leave me alone today”. Shows the general attitude towards the creatures.

- Random NPC within aid center: “that Swiss keeps hoarding all the good cheese”. Said in reference to the Sweiss building receiving most of the aid rations within the city.

- Whenever Naz sees one of the shadow creatures: “mhm yeah you better stay over there, wispy freak”. Can relieve some of the tension created by these encounters

- When arriving at any location: “lets get this over with”. Creates a sense of liveliness as the characters react to world

Customised Ambients

- In the main character's home with roommate: “god it's cold today, I thought it was supposed to be summer”. Personality to a character that would otherwise be easy to ignore.

- When inside the Sweiss building, the researcher says: “quietly now, just up ahead”. Reacting and explaining gameplay and tone freely instead of stopping everything to explain this to Naz.

- The bartender to Naz when walking through Sur Ton: “you shoul’da seen this old guy last night, soaked himself in rum and passed out mid wank in the bog”. Some context into the world that Naz rarely engages with.

- Jacob to Naz when she walks in the Silo hub: “Good morning! Sun’s out and the tank’s full. Ready for a busy day?”. A sarcastic but happy greeting referring to the quarantine as a tank.

Generic Banter

- When at home. “I can't do this anymore, stuck inside every single day. I'm so bored I could scream” says the roommate. “Yeah, would you rather come join me on the job” Naz responds. “Absolutely fucking not, ill stay here and rub one out” the roommate responds. As Naz leaves “I’ll see if I can find a sexy one for you”. The interactions between Naz and her roommate at home are meant to be a safe, humorous escape from the fear of the city. For Naz and the player.

- When Naz is standing in the Silo near Jacob. “Have you had any run-ins lately?” asks Jacob. “No, thank god. Been seeing them a lot more regularly though”. Naz responds. “So about that, we might have a side gig to help with that ” Jacob. “Okay so are we both going out into shadow shit country” she says with a smirk. Jacob laughs “I’ll send you the details”. A short discussion showing characters' personalities.

- When Naz walks into the Sur Ton and approaches the waitress. “Woah, you're almost buzzing,” Naz says to the waitress.”Yeah! It's always good to be happy, especially on a new delivery day.” the waitress responds smiling so wide. “I’m glad someone is.” she responds. “Carpe dien” chimes the waitress, but she pronounces it more like ‘car pay deem’. Showing different personalities and attitudes within the quarantine that will be used to show character development.

- Between the bartender and a customer. “Here you go sir” she places a drink and bowl in front of him. He sneers, “What's this shit?”. “It's what we have, stewed veg. Enjoy” she says wearily. “All i want’s a fuckin steak” he says under his breath. The bartender hums as if in agreement. Brief conversation between NPC’s to add more life to the world

Customised Banter

- During the above quest when the researcher and Naz enter the office. “Okay take this, hide it the bookcase, top shelf” he hands her the package. “Right, guess they dont read much” Naz responds. “Ha, no they're too busy stroking it. Their ego’s and… y’know. ” he says. “Ew, well I am not surprised.”. Naz adds “okay done, that should be good”. The researcher says “Good, go keep a lookout”. Characters explaining what needs to be done by the player without pausing the game, or the tension, to do so.

- Right after Naz and the researcher escape the Sweiss. “Drive, drive! Go left, there's less security that way” he says.”What the fuck was that, that thing?” she says. He sighs “They call it the Erebus, he is one the shadow creatures that we've been able to capture.”But what is it?” Naz says. “We have no idea, aside from holding it in place, we can't figure anything else out” he says. “Well fuck me” she mutters. “All I can say for sure, the other creatures, that we call the shades, only popped up after we trapped Erebus” he says. “So if you let it go we can end all this shit?” she bites. Despondent he says “They will never let that happen”. Dialog that plays as the player is traveling back to the researchers home, providing lore to what the players just experienced.

- During the quest, when Naz arrives at the Silo. “Alright, we got an important gig today, did the Sur Ton give you something?” asks Jacob. “Yeah it's in my truck” responds Naz. “Good, keep going as normal. When you go to deliver it, do whatever he says, we can trust him” Jacob says. “Are we sure? What's his name even?” argues Naz. “No clue, but he came to us asking for help. And this might be our only shot at getting into the Sweiss” he responds. Playing as Naz prepares herself for the day, letting the player know the importance of what's about to happen.

- When the bartender takes Naz to the backroom during the quest. “Heres the package you need to take, address is on it, and these boxes too” the bartender says. “Whats in here, are these empty?” Naz asks. “Yeah the boxes are, just gotta make you look real busy” the bartender responds. “Dont really need help with that. What's the plan with them?” asks Naz. “Take this with you, drop the boxes off at the Silo or whatever but dont let anyone see this one” the bartender said about the smaller package. “Gotcha, smuggling, so business as usual” Naz says sarcastically. More context about the tasks the player will have to undertake, without spoiling anything for the player.

List Of Figures 13

This proposal details the design for a narrative quest that acts as a direct continuation and conclusion to the quest from the previous assignment. Its primary objectives are to resolve the central conflict of the prior narrative and to deepen the lore of the game world. To achieve this, the document is structured into four key components: a comprehensive narrative outline for the quest, supplementary worldbuilding that reveals new facets of the setting, a script for a pivotal cinematic sequence, and the complete interactive dialogue, implemented and formatted using Twine.

Worldbuilding for new level

Upon completion of the preceding quest at the End location, two new areas will unlock for the player: the Fort Distribution Center and the Lennis Industrial Warehouse. This marks a significant expansion of the playable space, deliberately moving the player beyond the familiar, medium-density district they have grown accustomed to and into a dangerous, high-density urban zone.

4 - Fort Distribution Center

The Fort Distribution Center is another aid distribution hub, structurally similar to the familiar Silo Center. However, its location is the most remote yet, positioned far from the player's usual safe zones. This journey to the periphery of the map is designed to symbolically represent a venture into the unknown, heightening the sense of isolation and scale of the crisis.

5 - Lennis Industrial Warehouse

Located in the city's industrial zone, the Lennis Industrial Warehouse is a critical logistical node. While nearly all industrial activity has ceased, this area's robust infrastructure has made it the primary entry point for aid and supplies funneled into the quarantined city. Its operational importance makes it a high value and thus, high risk location.

Gameplay and Environmental Shift

This new high-density zone is a stark contrast to the previous environments, characterized by wide streets flanked by towering buildings that create a more claustrophobic and complex navigation space. This shift is not merely visual; it directly impacts gameplay by significantly increasing the difficulty. The shadow creatures native to this area are far more aggressive, abandoning their previous passive watchfulness for active and hostile pursuit.

Above is the updated map showing the two new locations that have been unlocked by beginning this quest. After completing this quest players will be able to travel here freely.

New quest narrative

This new quest is given to players at the end of the previous quest. Where they will visit two new locations have several smaller tasks to complete per location.

After completing the previous quest at the Sweiss Building, the group returns to the researcher's home, where they are contacted by Julia, who urges an in-person meeting. Naz and the researcher are suspicious following the earlier events, but after some coercion, they agree to go. Their first stop is the Fort Distribution Center. Upon arrival, players must introduce themselves to the people in charge, initiating a short dialogue that establishes these characters and the local situation. They learn that the shadow creatures have become much more aggressive, often approaching and following people, a change that hints at having started after the players witnessed Erebus in the Sweiss Building. Next, they retrieve a crate for another section of the center; while walking, players can optionally speak to other NPCs.

After placing the crate in their truck, they are directed to a new location: the Lennis Warehouse in the industrial zone. While traveling there, players notice how barren and quiet the area is. The first task at this location begins unexpectedly. As the truck turns a corner between two buildings, a large shadow creature blocks the road. After a brief exchange between Naz and the researcher, the player is urged to reverse and find another route, though they may choose to drive into the creature. Doing so demonstrates the threat it poses: the creature shatters the window, pulls Naz out, and causes a game over. Its motives and intentions remain unclear. If players flee, the creature follows in pursuit. It appears to move slowly, yet the player cannot escape—it disappears around one corner only to reappear around another. As players near the destination, a large spotlight flashes on, blinding the player and driving the creature away. They are then prompted to park and deliver the crate inside the building, where they meet Julia Escoffier.

Following a discussion that provides further lore and exposition among Naz, Julia, and the researcher, players are tasked with traveling back to the researcher's home with a new package. Its contents are unknown, but Julia instructs the researcher to take it with him the next time he goes to the Sweiss Building for work. With the package in transit, you drive back to the researcher's home, collect all of his things that he needs for work. You then drive him to the Sweiss and the quest ends.

Non player character design

Using the Summarized design template (Heussner et al. 2015: 82) this will be a new NPC that players will meet.

Name: Julia Escoffier
Age: 39 years old
Ethnicity: White, French
Height: 170 cm tall
Eyes: A saturated, bright blue.
Hair: Blond

Personality and Demeanor:
As the Deputy Mayor of Glemme City, she possesses a bright, charismatic personality that immediately puts people at ease. She is a natural performer, employing dynamic gesticulations and a captivating stage presence that makes her engaging and approachable to constituents of all ages. However, this affable exterior is underpinned by a sharp intellect and unshakable confidence. When she speaks, her clarity and conviction inspire deep trust in her audience, making her a remarkably persuasive figure who consistently achieves her objectives.

Appearance: Her professional image is one of impeccable, controlled polish. She maintains an arsenal of well-tailored suits, primarily in a palette of navy blue and black, which she pairs with a crisp white dress shirt. Her hair is consistently styled in a deceptively casual ponytail that is, in reality, meticulously groomed without a single strand out of place, mirroring the precise and calculated nature of her public persona.

Biography: A native of Glemme City, she was drawn to the spotlight from a young age, honing her natural talents through years of singing and theater lessons. She astutely recognized that politics was merely another stage, and she seamlessly transitioned her skills in performance, crowd-work, and narrative crafting into a political career. Her approach is a study in pragmatic idealism: she is genuinely successful in delivering what is best for her voters, but she strategically navigates every initiative to ensure she also secures a personal or political advantage from the deal.

Dialog on Twine

This dialogue, presented as a phone call between Naz and a new character named Julia, occurs immediately following the conclusion of the previous quest. Its primary functions are to introduce Julia, establish narrative context for the journey ahead, and formally assign the new objective. Accepting this quest will unlock the new high-density zone, providing players with a guided and relatively safe introduction to the environment and its more aggressive enemy types.

The interactive dialogue for this quest is constructed using the established template for interactive quest dialogue (Heussner et al. 2015: 165). This framework facilitates a branching conversation between an NPC and the player, designed to achieve three core objectives: provide the player with meaningful choices regarding quest pursuit and information gathering, ensure all dialogue options remain authentic to the established personalities of the characters, and effectively advance the narrative based on the player's decisions.

Cinematics script

This brief cinematic is designed to serve as a narrative bridge, triggering immediately upon completion of the previous quest to seamlessly introduce the new one outlined in this document. Its implementation is driven by several key design objectives aimed at enhancing player engagement and narrative impact.
First, it functions as a vital pacing mechanism, intentionally breaking the core gameplay loop of environmental traversal and combat to prevent potential repetition and player fatigue. Second, by seizing control from the player, the cinematic can craft a meticulously directed, tense atmosphere. This passive experience forces the player into the role of a vulnerable spectator, amplifying the emotional weight of the events unfolding before them.
The primary narrative impetus for this sequence, however, is the pivotal reveal of Erebus. Relying on in-game exploration for a moment of this significance carries the risk that players might miss it entirely or fail to grasp its importance. The cinematic ensures that all players are uniformly exposed to this critical story beat, controlling the framing, duration, and focus to guarantee they absorb the intended gravity of the revelation and spend adequate time with this central entity, thereby solidifying its role in the overarching narrative.

INT. dark office, cold steel surfaces and white fluorescent lamps.
NAZ works over by the bookshelf, the RESEARCHER is at a desk using the computer. They hear footsteps outside the door. Both dressed in work uniforms. They both look towards the closed door on the other end of the room.

NAZ
Shit, I'm almost done.

RESEARCHER
Yep, go keep a lookout

He speaks without raising his head. NAZ climbs down, as she walks over and opens the door the camera cuts to the hallway and shows several armed guards standing at the end to the right. Indistinct, calm chatter can be heard.

NAZ
Guards, we have to go. Now.

The Researcher pulls a USB from the computer and rushes over to the door. NAZ runs and grabs the box that she walked in with and walks towards the door.

RESEARCHER
We have to go around them.

NAZ nods. They quickly clean after themselves and walk out of the office, heading left.

CUT TO

INT.

Wide, high angle camera of the passage mimicking security camera showing NAZ and RESEARCHER walking away from the guards. Large, brutalist style passages with bright fluorescent lights mounted on the walls.

CUT TO

INT.

Large, open plan office floor. Concrete walls and floor, interlocking pillars. large plants in concrete pots scattered around.
NAZ and the RESEARCHER meander the large room avoiding other people and trying to reach the door at the other end. almost at the door, it flies open and more guards appear. They look towards the other exits and see they are all occupied.

NAZ

What are we going to do? Will they just let us leave? There is no reason for them to be suspicious of us.

RESEARCHER

No they dont but if no one recognizes you up here they will ask some questions. Come, I have an idea.

They fall in behind a group of other people and ascend a large staircase that takes them to another large open plan room. NAZ follows as he leads to a door on the opposite side of the room.

RESEARCHER

Hold onto that box, things are about to get messy.

They reach a large console table near the center of the room. He drops his bag, spilling the contents under the table. He picks them up quickly and as he rises slides his arm under the table where he flips open and presses a fire alarm type button. Immediately blinding white ceiling lights flash on and an alarm blares.

RESEARCHER

Okay, stay close. I tripped the intruder alarm. This should give us enough distraction to get you out.

NAZ nods. Others stand from their desks frantically grabbing things off their desks before heading towards exits or the staircase.

CUT TO

INT.

Montage of high angle security camera shots of NAZ and the RESEARCHER navigating passages, avoiding other people and guards. Traversing increasingly abstract rooms and locations as they travel down to the lower floors, purposefully avoiding elevators. They enter a large room with high ceilings, large concrete pyramid type spikes hanging from the ceiling. They progress about halfway across the room when they see a guard standing with his back to them, unable to hear them as the alarm is still sounding. The RESEARCHER grabs NAZ's shoulder and pulls her into the large metal door.

CUT TO

INT.

They enter a large curved room, veiling angled down towards a glass wall. The lights in the curved room are low, but on the other side of the glass wall are large spotlights shining straight down. They both survey the room quickly making sure there are no other people with them. The RESEARCHER walks over to a computer to the one side but says nothing. NAZ places the crate she is carrying down on a desk and walks over to the large window. Her expressions go from confusion to horror and she realizes what she's looking down into is looking back at her. She steps back from the glass in shock

NAZ
What in the fuck is that?

RESEARCHER
Meet Erebus. The reason we are all here.

NAZ
What do you mean? Is that thing one of those creatures out there?

RESEARCHER
As far as we know, yes. This whole building is here to keep it and study it.

NAZ places both hands on the glass and stares down at the shapes below. The RESEARCHER steps next to her.

RESEARCHER
We need to go, I have a way out for us.

NAZ
Well what have you found out about it? Anyway for all this shit to end?

RESEARCHER
We can talk later, clocks ticking.

NAZ sighs. The RESEARCHER turns and heads for the door. NAZ stands staring down at the creature before turning her body, eyes still fixed on the thing down below her. As her eye contact finally breaks the camera cuts.

CUT TO

EXT.

They run out through a maintenance exit far enough from other people. They make it back to the truck half sneaking half running to avoid being seen. They drive away

CUT

This quest is designed to be a pivotal turning point in the player's journey, transitioning from the contained mysteries of the initial district to the expansive and overtly hostile reality of the wider city. The narrative, initiated by the polished yet inscrutable Deputy Mayor Julia Escoffier via a Twine dialogue branch, grounds the world in political complexity, suggesting that the shadow crisis is not just a supernatural threat but a managed catastrophe with powerful, calculating human players. The subsequent journey through the new level, from the symbolically isolated Fort Distribution Center to the vital Lennis Industrial Warehouse uses environmental storytelling to build a world buckling under the strain of quarantine, where the last vestiges of civilization are precarious and hard-won. The deliberate character design of Julia, with her impeccable yet controlled appearance, serves as a perfect narrative foil to the chaotic, organic threat of the creatures.

The tension culminates in the cinematic script's climactic reveal of Erebus, a moment that re-contextualizes the entire crisis and shifts the narrative from survival to something far more ominous. Crucially, the quest introduces this new, more difficult chapter through a layered escalation: the environment becomes a claustrophobic maze of wide streets and towering buildings, the NPCs at the Fort Center explicitly report an alarming shift in creature behavior, and this is violently confirmed by the relentless, unstoppable pursuit of the new shadow entity. This sequence teaches the player that their previous strategies are now obsolete, forcing them into a desperate flight that ends only through external salvation, thereby clearly signaling that the rules of engagement have changed and a far more dangerous phase of the story has begun.
